

Transcription factors are proteins that bind to specific DNA sequences, such as the TATA box, to initiate the process of transcription.

The TATA box is a DNA sequence that is located upstream of the start site of a gene. It is a key regulatory element that helps to initiate the process of transcription.

The TATA box is a DNA sequence that is located upstream of the start site of a gene. It is a key regulatory element that helps to initiate the process of transcription.

The TATA box is a DNA sequence that is located upstream of the start site of a gene. It is a key regulatory element that helps to initiate the process of transcription.

The TATA box is a DNA sequence that is located upstream of the start site of a gene. It is a key regulatory element that helps to initiate the process of transcription.

The TATA box is a DNA sequence that is located upstream of the start site of a gene. It is a key regulatory element that helps to initiate the process of transcription.